Managing a library publications program

The University of California, Irvine, wins the John Cotton Dana Award for its unique approach.

The University of California, Irvine Library has won a Special Award in the 1985 John Cotton Dana Library Public Relations Award contest for its unique and effective administration of a library publications program. The UC Library was one of 15 winners selected from the 173 entrants that participated in this year's contest. This annual contest has recognized the achievements of outstanding library public relations programs since its inception in 1946. Three university libraries and one community college library participated in the contest this year.

The UC Irvine Library provided clear evidence that it has been managing a superb publications program. This award-winning publications program has produced an exemplary assortment of brochures, guides, maps, bibliographies, and newsletters which all share a coordinated graphic arts format. A standard masthead scheme integrated into all items produced in this program, plus a combination of complementary colors have contributed to the pleasant visual effect produced by these publications. This unified design has been enhanced by the placement of these publications on handsome display racks located at service areas throughout the library system.

The most remarkable aspect of this program actually pertains to its method of administration. This large-scale publications program, capable of producing numerous printed items each year, has been managed by a small committee of professional librarians who work within the UC Irvine library. This committee has relied greatly upon the widespread participation and high level of cooperation of librarians within the Library to make this program a success. In the opinion of this judge the publications themselves must possess such a high degree of quality that the UC Irvine library entry would have won an award on the basis of this accomplishment alone. The program has acquired additional distinction though, on the merits of its unique method of administering with a committee.
