Deaths

Mary George, senior reference librarian at Princeton University, has died. George began her professional career in interlibrary loan at the University of Michigan and later became a reference librarian and bibliographic instructor before joining Princeton to head the General and Humanities Reference Division (GHRD). While at University of Michigan, George also lectured in the graduate program of library science. She continued to teach library science at Drexel and then Rutgers University after her arrival at Princeton. In addition to heading GHRD for two decades, Mary coordinated user education, most notably the Writing Program. She served in many acting capacities: director of slides and photography, head of interlibrary services, head of public services, music librarian, German studies librarian, and politics librarian. She was elected and served eight years on the ALA Council. George was the UNESCO liaison for the International Documents Round Table of GODORT. She chaired the Policy and Planning Committee of ACRL's University Libraries Section. She was also an accomplished author, most notably her two books Elements of Library Research (Princeton University Press) and Learning the Library: Concepts and Methods for Effective Bibliographic Instruction (Bowker). zz
