Retirements

Rachael Naismith, assistant director for information and research at Babson Library, Springfield College, Massachusetts, is retiring. Naismith joined the library staff in 1995 as senior reference librarian and was subsequently promoted to assistant director. One of her accomplishments was overseeing the merging of the reference and circulation departments into the existing public services department. Previously, Naismith was head of reference at the University of Missouri-Kansas City, reference librarian at Carnegie Mellon University, and reference librarian/cataloger at SUNY-Binghamton (now Binghamton University). Naismith published articles on wide-ranging topics, including service to migrant farmworkers, federated searching, library publications, usability testing, and library jargon.

Karin A. Trainer, university librarian at Princeton University for 20 years, has announced plans to retire at the end of the academic year. Trainer, who worked as a librarian in the Catalog Department at the university's Firestone Library (1972–78) before returning to Princeton as university librarian in 1996, has overseen significant developments in the library system. One of the most visible changes is the renovation of Firestone Library, a 12-year project that has just three more years to complete. A member of the president's cabinet, Trainer is also a trustee of Princeton University Press and of the Princeton Club Library in New York. Previously, Trainer was associate university librarian at Yale University and director of technical and automated services at New York University.
