The Informal Logic editorial team has been undergoing changes, which are reflected in changes to our masthead with this issue.

After 16 years as a Co-editor, and a number of years before that—serving in various roles, beginning as Assistant to the editors (essentially carrying out the duties of Managing editor) and eventually serving as Consulting editor—Professor Hans V. Hansen has decided to devote his considerable energy full-time to other projects.

And after four years as Co-editor of the Informal Logic Newsletter (1979-1983) followed by 33 years as Co-editor of the journal, Informal Logic, Distinguished University Professor Ralph H. Johnson—who retired from the University of Windsor Philosophy Department in 2006—has decided to step down as Co-editor. With Tony Blair, Ralph was a co-founder of both the newsletter and the journal, and his departure marks a watershed in the life of Informal Logic.

We at the journal, and the wider community of scholars in the various fields that touch on reasoning and argumentation in theory and practice, owe them gratitude for the wisdom and good judgment that these two scholars brought to the selection of, and improvements to, the manuscripts that passed through their hands on the way to publication over those many years.
