Contributors

Kees de Bot is Professor of Applied Linguistics at the University of Groningen, the Netherlands and the University of Pannonia, Veszprém, Hungary. He has published on various topics in international journals and books. His current research interests are multilingual processing, code switching, the application of dynamics systems to language development, language attrition and the history of applied linguistics. His work is characterized by a certain lack of focus and he intends to keep it that way in the years to come.

Jacqueline Haimov was born, raised and educated (BA, MA and PhD) in Bulgaria. For the last 24 years she has lived and worked in Haifa, Israel. She has taught English as a foreign language for Haifa University, Open University and Oranim College of Education, Kiryat Tivon, Israel. She has also taught English to students of biology. Since 2008 she has been teaching academic reading, applied linguistics, vocabulary acquisition and pedagogical grammar in the English Department of Oranim College of Education. She has prepared course materials which are being used by all her colleagues teaching the same level of language proficiency. Contact data: Oranim Academic College of Education, Tivon Post 36006, Israel (jhsl1990@gmail.com)

Jelena Mihaljević Djigunović worked as a Professor of SLA and TEFL at Zagreb University, Croatia before she retired in October 2014. Her main research interests centre around teaching modern languages to young learners, the age factor, affect in language learning and teaching, and L2 teacher education. She has been involved in a number of large scale research projects, the latest one being Early Language Learning in Europe (ELLIE). She has published extensively in national and international journals. Her publications include two research books on affective learner factors and over 100 papers. She has co-edited several research volumes, and has published a number of EFL teaching materials.
